

PLEASE do not allow use of cell phones on airborne aircraft. On a plane there is no way to get away from someone talking on their phone; at least on the ground, you can walk away. Listen to the cell phone conversations around you: they are usually loud, banal, and many times very personal. Even headphones or earplugs cannot block them out. Does anyone really need to stay in that close touch that they can't be unreachable for a few hours? Should they even be on a plane if that's the case?

Thank you for your consideration, and please don't make flying more of a hassle than it already is.
